

UNMARKED GRAVES IN MCNAIRY COUNTY, TENN

COMPILED BY NANCY WARDLOW KENNEDY

THE FORGOTTEN DEAD by Nancy Wardlow Kennedy

God has granted peace for those that rest in unmarked graves.

Since the beginning of time, the ceremony of a loved one passing from this life to the next has always been sacred. A different time era, different religion or culture determined this passage. In ancient times, when a person of nobility died, all his possessions died and were buried also. Animals, slaves and sometimes family. The great pyramids tell us this. Other cultures burnt the dead and their possessions. In Biblical times, the bodies were anointed and usually laid in caves.

The Indians used several methods, one of which was putting the body on a pallet in a tree and let nature take its course. Some would later bury the bones. Their burial grounds were very, very sacred. Never to be disturbed or visited by strangers. In the movies, Jeremiah Johnson, death fell to all those that travel through a hallowed burial place.

In our culture, we bury the dead. McNairy county was formed in 1823 and people came by the droves looking for better land. Some stayed, some passed through. We have thousands of people with unmarked graves in McNairy County and probably thousands that are unmarked.

The early cemeteries were usually a family cemetery, which many have remained with us, but many burial places have been lost due to neglect, vandalism, and nature. Those passing though buried their loved ones where they died and moved on. There were many little community cemeteries or maybe one or two graves near the home place.

Some cemeteries were divided in early times. The family cemetery and the slave cemetery. Some had them all together, but maybe divided. A few like Benjamin Wright at Old Purdy Cemetery buried his slaves next to his family. Some community cemeteries like Sand Hill served all the community.

Why do we have so many of our ancestors buried in unknown places? It has always been this way. Time usually is the biggest reason. Most graves were marked with a wood cross or stake, or a sand rock. Wooden stakes rot and sand rocks crumble or may be covered in leaves and erosion takes place. Some would plant cedar trees, symbolizing eternal life. There is one old burial ground at Purdy that over the years just washed away.

Some families stayed here a few years and moved on and no one was left to care for the family burial plot. As it was with the Hamm cemetery at Gravel Hill. The Hamm family stayed in McNairy County about 15 years, buried several of their children and family, and moved on to Arkansas before 1860. Some know where the little cemetery is located but graves cannot be determined, they are forever lost to the annuals of time.

There is good reasons for those buried years ago to be in unmarked graves, but in our generation there is no reason for a grave not to be identified. The highest homage to give a loved one is to mark their resting place when they have gone from us. It is their rightful honor and out dignity to do it.

Please allow for errors in transcribing. This list was done twice, the first one, which contained about 1,500 names, corrupeted and data lost. I started a new list but ut us not as good as the first one. There may be some names that are documented in the Cox or Brown Cemetery documentation, please excuse if they are, time would not allow me to check. None of the second listing was checked - so it may be full of errors. Information was sent to me from several sources and all information was appreciated. Thanks to Dorothy Smith and Helen King for their help in proffing and checking the first document. Hopefully this will be an on-going project, so additions and corrections can be made. You may email me at nancywkennedy@hotmail.com. I claim no responsibility for accuraccy in the information transcribed - other than my error in transcribing. Nancy Wardlow Kennedy, Dec 22, 2006.

So still and silent now they lie, most forgotten and long gone by
They may be dead, but they're not gone, as long as one of us lives on! (NWK)
